Brezhnev Assails Errors, Asks New Economic Effort

By Bernard Gwertzman

MOSCOW, April 13 (NYT).-Communist party leader Leonid L. Brezhnev told the Soviet people tonight that "new methods and new solutions" are needed to solve the country's serious economic problems. In a nationally televised speech, Mr. Brezhnev said that he was speaking candidly about the problems because the party Central Committee and Politburo had decided that the people "should know when we have undoubted successes and about the problems that stand

"After three tragic years, here I am in free air. But this taste of liberty is still bitter because I left my wife and two children in Athens and there are still so many of my comrades who are suffering. If I am here, it is thanks to complete international solidarity and especially to our European friends."

The 44-year-old composer pleaded that the Council of Europe, which will begin a debate on alleged Oreek torture Wednesday in Strasbourg, "understand Greek problems."

Link to Debate Seen Although neither Mr. Theodorakis nor Mr. Servan-Schrei-ber could explain why the Greek government decided to release the composer, it seems likely that the Strasbourg debate on the Ruman Rights Commission's report on official torture of prisoners played a role

The disclosure of the secret report played a key role in the Council of Europe's decision last December to auspend Greece (a decision which was avoided when Greece voluntarily resigned), and this time the report is to be published.

The Greek government has also timed some restoration of constitutional freedoms coincide with this month's third anniversary of the 1967 coup d'etat.

Mr. Servan-Schreiber's role in Mr. Theodorakis's release was still far from clear. The former editor of the ceoter-left news magazine L'Express would say only that the Greek Students' Association of Paris had called on him Saturday and asked him to go to Athens,

The students asked him to intervene personally with Premier George Papadopoulos to try to "save the lives" of the 34 persons being tried for sedition. Mr. Servan-Schreiber rented a plane Saturday and flew to Athens at his own expense, known of the Greeks to run afoul of the military junts. As a former deputy in the pro-Communist United Democratic Left party, leader of the mili-tantly leftist Lambrakis youth organization and popular composer, he was adored by leftist youth both insida and outside Greece.

The composer and his music have had their ups and downs under the colonels. He was arrested following the 1967 coup and his music banned. In January, 1968, he was released and the government announced that only his "political" music would henceforth be banned.

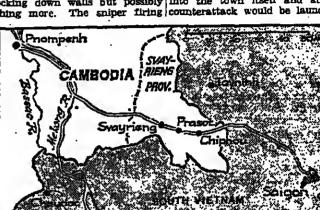

He said then. "I have made no compromise with the government. I have not signed any papers pledging to abstain from politics."

Nixon Sends Johnson Weekly Report On Progress of the War in Vietnam

By Dorothy McCardle WASHINGTON (WP) .- Former President Lyndon B. Johnson receives a briefing paper from the White House on the progress of the war in Vietnam every Friday. It is sent to him at the LBJ Ranch in Texas from President

Mr. Johnson told about the cooperation of the incumbent Republican administration with the leader of the previous Democratic administration at a recent get-together with some 50 members of the press at a private home here.

In a relaxed and affable mood, the former President spoke with warmth and appreciation of President Nixon although he hedged his options to "criticize at election time."

Former President Johnson said that Mr. Nixon's consideration had been extended to him as the direct result of a deuthbed wish expressed by the late President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Mr. Johnson said that when Gen. Eisenhower was near the end of his life at Walter Reed Hospital, he urged President Nixon to "be as decent and considerate" to the outgoing Mr. Johnson "as Johnson has always been to me." Gen. Eisenhower had been an idol of Mr. Johnson for years, and Mr. Johnson sought Ike's advice many times after be Flexible Leg Cast Speeds Fracture Healing by 50 Pct.

LOS ANGELES, April 13.— A full-leg cast that bends at the knee and helps heal broken legs in half the time required with the old rigid casts has been developed by a University of Southern California medical

The new cast, which func-tions like an orthopedic hrace, has been used on 200 patients who had an average healing time of 14 weeks, reported Dr. Vert Mooney of the USC School of Medicine.

Fifty other patients with broken legs had to keep their conventional casts on for 25 weeks before their tractures

Patients begin walking within two hours with the new device, Dr. Mooney said. It consists of a metal brace that bends at the knee, with a plaster cast above and below the knee, "The mechanical stress placed on the broken bone by walking helps the bone tissue to build up faster, speeding healing," he said. "The cast-brace supports the weight of the leg so the bone is subjected to only a slight pressure as the patient walks." The device can be used for fractures around the knee, above and below, which have been treated traditionally by application of a rigid, thigh-to-

One obstacle to its immediate widespread adoption is that treatment requires the help of a brace technician to work with the physician in the mechanics of applying the cast. Brace technicians are not available everywhere.

The Battle of Bradenton

It is tempting to speculate that the abortive battle of Bradenton, in which Gov. Claude Kirk of Florida marched hie men into the Manatee County school board and marched them out again, is the result of President Nixon's equivocal stand on school integration, his open adherence to the concept of the neighborhood school and the general air of benign neglect which characterizes the administration's attitude toward racial problems. If this relationship is correct, it would demonstrate that a policy avowedly intended to reduce frictions can. in fact, create them.

To be sure, Gov. Kirk's rebellion was not carried to the point of the confrontation of forces. He submitted to a court order (and the imposition of conditional fines), and it is difficult to see what has been accomplished. There will be a closer study, perhaps, of the specific problems of Manatee County, and a greater realization, it is to be hoped, of state responsibility for the orderly transition from segregation_ This could be useful-especially the latter. The governor complained that the state was not involved early enough in the court proceedings-but this sprang precisely because the state did not involve itself at any primary stage in the conditions which produced the proceedings. The notion, prevalent in the South, that the state has no other function than to protect the counties and local school boards against the federal courts, when their own inaction has made them liable to indicial process, may be practical politics, but it is not good government.

The immediate Issue in Bradenton was, as in so many places, the forced busing of students to achieve raclal balance. The concept is a thorny one, and the bus has become a kind of symbol of imposed authority, a federal juggernaut under which the defenders of the nelphborhood school are crushed. In plain fact, the school hus is a great fact of American education in the suburbs and rural districts, an sificient eubstitute for the one-room schoolhouse and a most useful device in any area where the school population is relatively scattered. The real question is not the bus, but who rides it, and where.

This last question cannot be answered easily in many cases. In the vast urban ghettos of the North balance cannot always be achieved by any reasonable degree of cross-busing, and the idea of black control of black nelgbborhood schools-reverse segregation-has set up new obstacles to integrated school systems. But, admitting all ths complexitles, admitting the need for improving the quality of education generally as a prime-target, and recognizing that the neighborhood school is only one facet of the problem of the neighborhood as a whole, the practical and legal requirement for real progress toward integration persists.

The process may be delayed, frictions may be exacerbated by such performances as that of Gov. Kirk, but it cannot be halted or until Donald Kendail of the Liberal Emergency Committee on American Trade pro-

For more than a year Mr. Nixon has wavered between sectional special-interest demands for trade protection, and the broader national interest in freer trade. Now-in the textile dispute with Japan-he is at his administration's first moment of truth on this critical issue. If he caves in to his political creditors in Southern textile states, he will be beckoning a protectionist wave that will probably sweep far beyond textiles and that also will probably doom his own trade bill. A major trade war is regarded by experts as a real possibility. If. on the other hand, he takes advantage of the moderate option open to him, his administration stands a good chance of riding out the rough trade storms ahead.

In the campaign Mr. Nixon promised Strom Thurmond to limit imports of manmade and woolen textiles from Japan, and in the balance. The Kendall plan-a freeze upon election he dispatched his Commerce on imports for a year while a presidential Secretary to Tokyo (and other East Asian points) to make this promise good. But Japan, its government more nationalistic and able way out. It remains only for Mr. Nixon its legislature more textile-minded than at any time since the war, dug in its heels. Paris expects Peking to reject the French proposal on Indochina. And, without the agreement of China, the French proposal loses any chance of success. Several specialists consider that Peking is eager to prolong a situation in Southeast Asia which is proving very embarrassing for the Soviet Union and which can create additional disficultles for President Nixon. But on the nther hand, no sufficiently clear indication existe permitting the conclusion that Communist China intends to cause a world con-

If it abstained from consulting the blg powers, the United States and Britain in particular, it was to better underscore the independence of its move and facilitate approaches. It is, moreover. recalled that it took much time in late 1953 and in early 1954 to get the first Geneva

Elegy for a Country Church

By Anthony Lewis

LONDON.—One of the great joys of England, and surprises. is the survival of rural villages unspoiled by the Industrial Revolution or the population curve or even the outomobile. A few miles from a main road, among the farms, one comes upon a small street of stone houses and an old church—a village with a sense of historical identity, the sort of place whose eccentricities Miss Jane Marple would enjoy.

Fifty miles northwest of London there is a village called Stewkley. Its distinction, the center of its identity, is a Norman church built around the year 1140. The characteristic square Norman tower has strange elongated arches at the top, and Patrick O'Donovan of the Observer wrote that the church was "decorated with a barbaric splendor of zigzag carvings and grotesque heads."

There is a fair chance that, a few years from now, the Stewkley church end the rest of the village will be buried under the asphalt of an airport runway. For Stewment, albeit reluctantly, accepted the Kenkley is in one of four areas now dall plan as a basis for continuing talks. analysis. They have intricate studies showing how much it would cost the business traveler to get from each proposed airport site to London, how many sheep would no longer be able to graze, how expensive it would be for the villagere to escape the hell of sirport noise, and so forth.

In these calculations the cost of destroying the Norman church at Stewkley is put at $122,400. That is the face value of the parish insurance policy, which covers only the church roof. Balanced against the advantage of proximity to London in the Roskill commission's computers, the figure for the church will not outweigh very many tired businessmen.

Here we have an example of the painful inadequacy of modern economics to measure the things that make life worth living. Only a few economists, such men as J. K. Galbraith and E. J. Mishan, have criticized their dismal science for assuming that economic growth is always a good thing.

'Pseudo-Growth'

An English economist, Alan Coddington, warns in the magazine New Society against what he terms "pseudo-growth." That occurs, he says, when "increases in consumption or investment are made possible not by the growth of net production but at the expense of running down natural assets in the form of both resources and Alas, there follow in Coddington's article some of those diagrams that make non-economists despair, with circles and arrows signifying very little. He admits the difficulties of quantifying beauty and nature and quiet, but he urges economists to start trying.

But some things really cannot be measured. What is a Norman church of unusual design worth to a country? Such operations are beyond the range of statisticians, even perhaps beyond the ordinary head-counting calculations of politics in a democracy.

For example, it may well be thet many village people would like an airport in their area, for the prosperity they think it would bring. A union leader at one of the possible airport sites said: "Pubs, shops, dance halls, bingo halls and bowling alleys mean a damn sight more than a Norman church."

But a civilized country may de cide that there are essential values other than prosperity for the largest number. A Socialist government of Britain, after all, spends millions in support of ballet and opera and theater that only a relative handful can actually see. The theory is that the national life benefits in nonmaterial ways.

The desire to keep Stewkley and its church intact-and other viilages, other churches—is not just middle-class cultural paternalism. Nor is it sentimentality that makes so many people, nowadays, put the newspaper down in pain when they read that some other work of man or nature must be destroyed for the sake of progress.

If there are no more villages, and no more flint churches, those planeloads of American tourists may go elsewhere in their search for an imagined repose. If air-traft noise and elevated highways assault daily life in London, it will not be London any more. The planner who fails to understand that as he makes his cost-benefit analysis is lika Wilda's cynic, who knows the price of everything and the value of nothing.

The Nixon Philosophy

Arms and the Man

By Chalmers M. Roberts

WASHINGTON.-It has now with the Soviet Union, Poland and been 13 years since a young East Germany. and obscure Harvard lecturer, in It is against

"The notion that armaments are the cause and not the reflection of conflict is not new. It has been the basis of schemes of disarmament throughout history; it was the rationale of all the disarmament conferences in the Twenties and Thirties. Nevertheless, it is open to serious doubt."

The author, of course, was Henry A. Kissinger and the book "Nu-clear Weapons and Foreign Policy." One of its readers was Richard Nixon and the reading was one of the factors which led him to put Kissinger at his right hand in the White House 15 months ago. Most important, much of the Kissinger thinking coincided with Mr. Nixon's own evolving ideas. Perhaps this is nowhere more the case than in the concept lodged in those Kissinger words.

To understand President Nixon's approach to the strategic arms limitation talks (SALT), which resume in Vienna on Thursday, requires an analysis of his approach to the other nuclear superpower involved, the Soviet Union.

The relationship between arms and war has a chicken-and-egg quality: no one can prove which came first. President Nixon, like Kissinger, takes a geopolitical view of the world. The experts who have worked up the American proposals for the Vienna talks focus on a host of technical and tactical problems. They are important to the Nixon-Kissinger team but they are not central.

Richard Nixon came of political age in the coldest of the cold war years. The Soviet-American antagonisms he felt then he still feels, though a man's view of them cannot fail to be altered from the prospect of the Oval Office in the White House, But, fundamentals are fundamentals.

'Still Communists'

In a hitberto unpublished Nixon speech, made in California on July 29, 1987, before he announced for his second presidential try, Mr. Nixon took account of the changes in the Communist world since his vice-presidential years in speaking of what he termed "Subject A, the Soviet Union."

His summation: "They Ithe Soviet leaders] are still Communists and they are committed to the goal of a Communist world: they are battling the Chinese for leadership of that world. They want to achieve that goal without war. At the same time they want more economic progress at home. They will work with us only when doing so serves one or more of these tores objectives."

Mr. Nixon added that "diplomatically, we should have discussions with the Soviet leaders at all levels to reduce the possibility of miscalculation and to explore the areas where bilateral agreements would reduce tensions. But we must always remember in such negotia-tions that our goal is different from theirs: we seek peace as an end in itself. They seek victory, with pesce being at this time a means toward that end. In sum we can live in peace with the Soviet Union. but until they give np their goal for world conquest it will be for them a peace of necessity and not of choice."

From such a philosophical base. what Mr. Nixon said at his first presidential press conference about the SALT talks flowed logically: "I favor strategic arms talks, Again, it is a question of not only when but the context of those talks... It would be a mistake, for example, for us to fail to recognize that simply reducing arms through mutual agreement ... will not, in itself, assure peace ... "What I want to do is to see to it that we have strategic arms talks in a way and at a time that will promote, if possible, progress on outstanding problems in which the United States and the Soviet Union, acting together, can serve the cause of peace."

Partly as a result of this Nixon geopolitical view, the United States today is involved in Soviet-American talks on the Middle East, contects on Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, meetings (in a four-power context) on Berlin and, through talks on West German relations Mr. Nixon's.

and obscure Harvard lecturer, in a lit is against this massive back-2 book that was to make him drop of diplomatic activity that one must view President Nixon's approach to the SALT talks this week. The President is operating on the premise indicated by the quotations from Kissinger's book; Arms are not in themselves the cause of tensions; the key is the political relationship between the two superpowers. And so SALT proposals must relate to that political scene. This has been called "linkage and the idea has produced a lot of unhappy, even angry, words from the Soviet Union, Despite such a reaction, the men in the Kremlin operate on the same principle, for they, too, take a geopolitical view of the world. In both the Wash-ington and Moscow version, geopolitics is the bringing to bear on foreign policy all the factors of modern society, political, economic and military. None is viewed, or used, in isolation.

In the case of SALT, the reasoning means that proposals for the conference table in Vienna must relate to much more than simply holding down on arms expenditures and/or seeking to prevent the nuclear arms race from moving into a new and more dangerous plane with the deployment of multiple warheads and anti-missile defense

In his worldwide foreign policy report on Feb. 18, the President said that "we are under no illusions" about the problems of what he has termed "an era of negotiation," in part because "we know there are enduring ideological difierences."

He went on to say that "we will deal with the Communist countries on the basis of a precise understanding of what they are about in the world, and thus of what we can reasonably expect of them and ourselves." And be added that "we did not invent the inter-relationship of international events such as arms control and political issues, "it is a fact of life" because "political issues relate to strategic questions."

Arms Superiority

The President long has been an exponent of military superiority: in that 1967 speech, for example, he said: "Because the primary Soviet goal is still victory rather than peace, we must never let the day come in a confrontation like Cuba and the Mideast where they, rather than we, have military superiority.

The facts of life forced him to substitute "sufficiency" in nuclear arms for "superiority," but the old worry, the old suspicion, remains in the Nixon mind. In his world report in February, he said that "the growing strategic forces on both sides pose new and disturbing problems." That his concern is ohiefly about the growing Soviet nuclear arsenal, begun after Nikita Khrushchev's humiliation over Cuba in 1962, is really what Air. Nixon meant can be deduced from his next sentence in that report:

"Should a president, in the event of a nuclear attack, be left with the single option of ordering the mass destruction of enemy civilians, in the face of the certainty that it would be followed by the mass slaughter of Americans?"

. Many of those outside government, and some inside, who are highly knowledgeable about the arms race disagree with this presidential worry. They contend that the United States, with its three nuclear weapons systems (landbased missiles, submarine-based missiles and long-range eircraft) is in no such danger of Soviet nuclear blackmail.

The point, however, is that it is President Nixon, not his critics, who makes American policy. And the logic of his views leads him in the direction of high caution in approaching the Vienna conference. "We must insure that all potential aggressors," said the President, ese unacceptable risks in contemplating a nuclear attack, or nuclear blackmail, or acts which could escalate to strategic nuclear war, such as a Soylet conventional attack on Europe."

It is far more difficult to divine the motivations of the men in the Kremlin who make the decisions on what their delegation will do in Vienna. The evidence is conclusive that in many respects their views West Germany, East-West are a collective mirror image of

Denmark's new, transitional, compromise abortion law may turn out to have been a mistake. However, the way it was drafted and passed could remind Americans that the Danes are politically much more mature than we are. The government, press and public mored from received ideas about abortion to understanding how a change in the law might affect particular children, women and men. Un-Maoist but beautiful.

We cannot yet approach sexual legislation with Danish skill. But even if the Presidential Commis-

Kidnapping Guilt The Guatemalan extremists are said to have established their "credibility" by the murder of Ambassador Karl von Spreti. Swift action by the government of Guatemala is required for many reasons, not the least of which is to put an end to this type of terrorist behavior in Latin America and elsewhere. As an American lawyer I believe that the following suggestion is both just and ethical: The Guatemalan government should take the 16 prisoners the kidnappers wished to have released and have them stand trial for conspiracy to commit murder. In most American states such a charge carries the death penalty if a convic-If the 16 prisoners are found

The execution of these conspirators/murderers (if they are guilty) might force a more sober appraisal by these extremists and others with similar inclinations.

Liberalized Abortion: What Sociologists Say By Israel Shenker

NEW YORK (NYT).—Making abortion legal in New York solves a legal problem, but raises other questions: Will it improve the lot of women, the sanctity of marriage, the morality of citizens? The New York Times asked professors of sociology for their opinions, and got these divergent views:

Dorothy Swaine Thomas, University of Pennsylvania-From any viewpoint it's a good thing to relax the law and that's that. It's a good thing because the law is discrimingtory against women, and I can see no way in which repeal of B law harring abortion could destroy the family or morality or religion. I see no harm at all, and I just do not agree that abortion means murder.

"Abortion has been an effective means of controlling population growth in Japan, Rungary, and Eastern European countries. It's likely to decrease the rate of growth of population here as well." .

Robert Nisbet, University of California, Riverside-'I am in favor of the utmost rational liberalization of our abortion laws, and that springs from my sociological mind as well as my human heart

Georges Rouault to be auctioned in Stockholm.

By Wilfrid Fleisher

STOCKHOLM, April 13.—Over E hundred years ago, E roung Polish nobleman, who had taken part in an sbortive pprising against the Russians fled to Sweden, where he quickly gained favor with the court and the nobility. Through the intercession of Sweden's King, Charles XV, the 24-year-old Henry Bukowski was given employment with the court jeweler, which served as a stepping-stone to setting up his own business in Stockholm, on April 15, 1870, as an antique dealer and muctioneer.

The Bukowski firm prospered steadily. When Bukowski died in 1900, tha firm passed into the hands of the Swedish banker Martin Aronowitsch, and later to his son. Gregor, who will mark the Bukowski centenery with a four-day auction heginning Wednesday. It is regarded as one of the most important art events in this area in recent years.

Bukowski's early auctioos were social events for a small cultural elite. Today, they still maintain an exclusive charseter. But the audience is broader. Nevertheiess, to have their bids recognized by the auctioneer, "unknown" huyers must announce that they are bidding in cash. They come with their briefcases stuffed with moncy and peel off thousand-crown ootes cash to an attendant in the Bisle. Bukowski's reputation as Sweden's leading antique dealer in attested by the fact that the National Museum will hold an exhibition next month of its own acquisitions and those of other Swedish museums, from Bukowski's over the past cen

As an exception, since Bu kowski rarely deals in art later than 18th-crotury, there are two works by the French expressionist artist Georges Rouauit (1671-19531-an oil painting of a church in a heavy black cutline with vivid colors thickly applied ($22,000) and a collage, in the Matisse style, of biblical scene ($7,000).

Among Swedish paintines, there is a large portrait of Louis-Philippe, Duke of Orleans, on a white horse, painted in Paris in 1757, by Alexander Roslin, Sweden's foremost oortrait painter of royalty ($18,in the possession of the Orléans family and the question now is whether it will remain in Sweden or return to France.

Zorn is usually represented at a Bukowski sale with at least one painting, bot this time there are seven Zorns—five oils Rod two watercolors, in additioo to 84 etchings.

Zorn paintings seem to more than hold their own, with priess rising in ratio to the dwindling value of the currency, but Zom etchings are at an all-time low." They are out of fashion at a time when the public is demanding hright colors for lighter walls. In Zorn's life-time, Bukowski had exclusive rights to the artist's output of etchings and they fetched as much as $2,000 each for the best and were rated as gil;edge securities. They are now sold in batches of three for an average of $150 a lot.

Two notable French pieces of furniture will also be sold; an inlaid corner table, signed T. Boudin, Parls 1751 ($16.000); and a graceful Louis XV writing desk, signed Jacques Dubois 157.000).

In Oriental art, there are three choice Sung "Temmosi". bowls from the collection of the iate Dr. Nils Palmgren, a former curator of the king's colresearch in Sung ceramics in China. The bulk of Palmeren's collection of about 40 first-class "Temmoku" bowls, prized by the Japanese for use in tea ceremonies, was recently sold by his: widow to a Tollino collector for a reported $20,000.

With so many high-priced Items in the centennial sale. Dr. Aronowitsch thinks that the old Bukowski suction record of $573,830 (set in 1966) may well be surpassed.

Medium-term Eurocurrency finance is our most important business

-consult us when it is important to you.

Rothschild Intercontinental Bank was established specifically to meet the needs of multi-national businesses for medium-term Eurocurrency finance. It was not added to our list of services. We specialise in it. Through our member banks we have invaluable connections with leaders in commercial and investment banking in London, Paris, Amsterdam, Geneva, Brussels, Zurich, Sydney, Cleveland, Houston and Seattle.

The success of our business depends on our success in providing Eurocurrency finance in the form best suited to our clients' needs. When you have a deal or a development which depends on it, do what eight leading banks, and many international companies do. Call Rothschild Intercontinental.

Clark Equipment Gets Revolving Euro-Credit

PARIS, April 13.—J. Frederick Bechtel, vice-president of Clark Equipment Co., said today his firm $15 million revolving credit with a group of European banks to finance expansion plans in France, West Germany and the United

Mr. Bechtel said some $8 million will be spent on expanding the construction equipment firm's

He said that operations outside North America last year produced $234 million in revenue out of the million. Profit margins are run-ning a bit below the 15 to 18 percent rate of return in North America, but he said he expected the European rate to shortly equal that of the home company.

BLONDIE

BRIDGE By Alan Truscott

It is often vital to be able to judge whether another player's bidding is based on high-card strength or distributional power. Subtle clues that may provide the answer to such questions can easily be missed by experts. One was missed by both South and West on the diagramed deal East opened with one club, West responded one heart and North made a take-out double. East jumped to four hearts, hoping to silence South, but that player was encouraged by the probability of a double fit for his side in spades and dia-monds. West continued to five hearts, expecting to make a vulnerable game.

South persevered with five spades, uncertain who could make what, and expecting to find not more than one heart in his partner's band.

West doubled with quiet confidence, expecting to collect a penalty of about 500: he held two aces, a possible trump trick, and his partner had opened the bidding. He led the club three, and South ruffed. He could not afford to draw trumps before establishing diamonds, so he led a diamond at once, a mis-

West made a mistake in his turn by playing low on the dia-mond lead. The queen won in the dummy, and a low diamond was returned. East seized the opportunity to ruif, with his singleton trump, a questionable play he regretted when West's ace appeared on the trick.

Another club lead forced South to ruff, but he had no trouble making his contract. He played the spade ace, finessed dummy's ten when East showed out, drew the remaining trumps and made his demands. A heart was lost at the finish.

If East had not ruffed the second diamond lead, South would have had to judge the need to finesse against West's spade jack. There was an in-ference from the bidding: East would have redoubled and bid four hearts if he had held high-card strength so his immediate raise to game had a preemptive flavor.

If South had made this inference at the beginning of the play he would have played the spade ace and then played dismonds, succeeding against any defense because the spade finesse can follow later,

WHAT D. Keith Mano has been up to in his first three books ir nothing less than an attempt to pump fresh plasma into the Christian novel It's as though, on the death of Flannery O'Connor, someone had to pick up the burning cross and carry it like a flashlight into the mysteries, the swamps of faith. Not necessarily 2 Southern someone, employing the Gothic as a sort of eschato-logical poso stick; nor a de-frocked dabbler in papal politics; nor a dyspeptic pilgrim dragging himself to distant climes in search of an original sin to excuse his failure of nerve. But a tough-minded young craftsman like Mr. Mano trying to accommodate the modern world as he perceives it to the mysteries as he suspects them. Thus in "Bishop's Progress" (1968) an Episcopal cleric went to a hospital for surgery. and confronted Science and Progress—the scalpel applied to the soul Thus in "Horn" (1969) a white priest had to face up to Black Power. And thus in "War Is Heaven!" a Christ-ridden United States Army sergeant

The war is one of those "many Vietnams" Che Guevara predicted for Latin America. The country is called Cama-guay, a military dictatorship trying with the help of United States "advisers" to crush a guerrilla insurrection. One of the advisers is Sergeant Hook, a 28-year-old virgin, a warrior-saint whom even the mosquitoes fear to bite. What Hook seeks on a dangerous patrol to the interior, with reluctant Cama-guayans and variously afflicted American irregulars, is not eractly martyrdom, but a way of dying, an end to pride, "a secret .coming and going," .a.

takes on death, salvation, Communism and moral ambiguity.

closing of the body's inventory and a judgment, Mr. Mano does many things marvelously. The war he has dreamed is as real as Stephen Crane's in "The Red Badge of Courage." The locale is evoked with a sensuous simplicity: "The birds bad been silenced by the heat, and there was only the torrid sizzle and chirrup of insects, sounding more like the complaint of a great, electric machine than the emanation of natural things. There were no clouds, but the blue of the sky was too brilliant to be seen; the sun left an angry white imprint -a soundless explosion-on the Hook's visions, admixtures of the erotic and the metaphysical, ... early, I parted with my hands. I apperceived them-even those ten fingernails that seemed so odd, like eyes, like saddened windows, like visors. I cupped myself in m. own palms, and I sensed the usefulness, the free co-ordination, the hymns that rest in my fingers."

Mr. Mano also does many things currently unpopular. For one, he takes Christ seriously.

For another, he often write (without the permission of John Oliver Killens) from the point. of view of a black man. For a third he's very much the ans. Communist Sergeant Hooks little lectures on politics are embarrassingly simple-minded Must all the Camaguayans on his patrol be sadists or homosexuals or traitors or hopele incompetents? Must only the guerrillas employ torture? (Ba: tista? Trujillo?) Such senti-ments as "We make war out of love. And God allows it out of love. Only an animal kills without love" are so much mud in

But measuring a writer by his ideological biceps is fatuous Such measurements undoubtedly account for our neglect of Evelyn Waugh's World War II trilogy, our ignorance of the poetry of Roy Campbell and our inability to cope with Ezra Pound, Mr. Mano's moonshot into ambiguity reopens perspectives that a secular presumption sought to seal over with black plastic. Does Hook really want to live? Is sexlessness a rehearsal for death, or sainthood? Can we save our souls only by risking them? Is Lieutenant Storch an abiding form of vegetable life? Mr. Mano is very young in years, and very old in miracles, scars, mysteries, talent, Hook lures a larger fish than most novelists bother to conceive of these gray days.

Princess Remembers Proust, Times Past

Wednesday, May 1, 1912.

Princesse.

Your "Alexandre Asiatique" really came "like the face of the sun." Unfortunately, the book itself has proved to me that our disagreement was more profound and that it had to do with ideas . . I notice that after having told you that I never think about myself. I talk of nothing but me and the joy I feel in thinking about you. But I also notice that it is an exegesis of yours that I should talk about myself . . . Doesn't the death you extol resemble the life I lead? But the latter will always lack the delightful and really perfect grace of your words when you say the story of his life ends in a bird's chatter."

Please deign, Princesse, to accept my admiration and my grateful respect.

The Princesse Marthe Bibesco, sitting upright in a scroll chair, glanced out at the stippled expanse of the Seine as a gust of April rain, like a handful of lightly tossed gravel, hit the casement window overlooking the Quai Bourbon. The dying light of late afternoon, diffused by saturated blackish clouds, and further dimmed by the drapes of the salon, fell mainly on her visitor, while she herself was in shadow.
"Do I get tired of talking about Proust? Neveri"
Not even after 60 years? No, never.

Not, mind you, that the princess lives in the Proustian past. Eighty-two now, but still brisk and alert, she has just been awarded the 25,000 franc ($4,500) Grand Prix de Litterature by the Singer-Polignac foundation. Not for having known Proust, but for a lifetime of literary excellence. Her many works include novels, memoirs, biographies—a wide variety

The prize she has won was endowed by the late Princesse Edmond de Polignac, née Wignarette Singer, of the immensely rich American sewing-machine family.

November, 1912.

Mon cher Antoine (Bibesco). Here is the only copy of "Swann." Give it to Gide and to Copeau to read. I am giving you some points about the novel, which you already know, but which might be useful

"Du côté de chez Swann" is the fragment of a novel, which will have as general title "A la recherche du temps perdu." I should have liked to have published it as a single whole, but it would have been too long . . .

The princess shifted in her chair and adjusted her rather thick dark-rimmed glasses. "What was his conversation like? Like feu d'artifice—yes, just like fireworks!"

Where and when did they first meet? "It was at the Opera, a performance of Tristan"." She thought for a moment. "It must have been 1907. I was 17, and had been married for a year." II it was 1907 she must have been 19, but who's counting?: Armand Guiche (the Duc de Gramont) brought him to our box. Later Proust wrote some verses for me about that evening at the Opera,"

The Bibescos are a Romanian-born clan, several branches of which have lived in France for generations. Mina Curtiss's "Letters of Marcel Proust," from which excerpts are quoted here (Vintage Books, Random House, 1986) includes letters to five Bibescos-Princess Marthe, Princess Elizabeth, Prince Portrait of Princess Bihesco by Boldini, circa 1911.

Antoine, Marthe's cousin, and two other princes, making for true Proustian complexity.

"Oh yes," Princess Marthe said. "He came here. He called it Venice in Paris.' But he used to visit us hefore then in the Faubourg Saint-Honore..."

The princess's secretary, a tall, white-haired woman, entered the room to say that another visitor had arrived. The princess fobbed her off and resumed the conversation, which turned toward contemporary French writers. Whom did she esteem?

Mairaux. Anyone else? Sartre, perhaps? Oh yes, but "events go against him." Against his theories? Yes. Also, she doesn't care for "vulgarity on purpose." The princess said that Sartre had visited the grave of Chateau-briand, and that upon it he had done "what little dogs doand when the ocean was so near at hand."

Princesse, May 1, 1912.
... Alexandre is right in saying that to cease hoping May 1, 1912 is despair itself. But although there is no end to my desires, I never hope. And perhaps, too, the great sobriety of my life, in which there are no journeys, no walks, no society. no light, is in itself a contingent desire that adds fuel to my perennial desire. And when one no longer thinks of one's personal pleasure, one even finds a certain amount of it in determining the laws that deprive us of what we thought we could keep, even of the very heart itself. . . .

The white-haired secretary came in again, this time followed by the maid, who was slightly younger. The princess stirred in her chair, and reluctantly heaved herself up.

"It wasn't really snobbery, you know. He was observing these people, like a collector of butterflies."

This reminded the departing visitor of another observer, another collector of butterflies, who had also done much of his early collecting in Paris. Did the princess think that, as some have suggested, the two butterfly fanciers had quite a lot in common?

The Princesse Marthe said, "Who is that?" "Nabokov."

"How do you spell it?"

A Pflug For the Mini

Listen, who started all this "mini-midi-maxi" business in the first place? Has it really only been a couple of months, or is it true, as a brain-washed eighth-grader friend insists, that the expression was coined in 47 B.C. by Julius Ceasar himself in announcing the defeat of Pharnaces to the Roman Senate? More to the point, who's going to finish it? Would you believe Jo Ann Pflug?

"I like short skirts," said Jo Ann, one of the stars of "M"A"S"H." to Parad: magazine, "and I'm going 'o continue to wear them no matter what anyona else says. I believe that women should wear whatever they decide they look and feel best in Some women dress for other women. I dress for men. I consider clothes part of the total package. I'm not interested in any man who likesme solely because I dress well. How I dress I consider merely incidental. If a man likes you primarily because you dress well you've got a jerk on your

A slightly more violent reaction might be read between the lines of a poignant classifled ad in The New York Times: "Maxi-Coat (Bottom Part) Lost in cah, vic. 87th & West End Ave. Reward."

"Re Anne and the cannibal (People, April 6)," writes Andrew A. Corner from Richmond, England, "Woe be unto the first blighter who asks for the princess's hand!"

Miss Stanford. who has a record of 17 convictions as well as the endorse-ment of the Sausalito Women's Club, openly admits to having run a house once favored by a great number of delegates to the founding of the United Nations ("I did the best I could for them. There was a lot of money around, a lot of Arab princes") and convincingly de-lends her chosen profession; "If we had more of it today, we wouldn't have so much trouble. Animals are far more realistic." As for politics, "As a taxpayer, and a large one, I'm going to expose the finan-cial mismanagement of Sausalito. You wouldn't believe the things that go on in this town. There is a general breakdown in morals." ARLING: Cantinflas, 58. Mexican bullfighterturned-movie actor, who is rest-ing comfortably in a Mexico City hospital after suffering a cardiac arrest on Sunday. ----

The cosmopolitan Baghdad Observer; having gotten around to a review of John Lennon's controversial lithographs, tells it like it is:

"In the first one, the scratchy lines showed Lennon and Yoko meeting. In the second, they are running away. In the third, they are being married before a registrar. In the fourth, they are fleeing to Amsterdam, And in the fifth, they are doing their 'peace-in-bed' press con-ference in Holland. The next eight simply show three vary ing manners of how Lennonand Yoko reach a climar fartheir thoughts, sex-wise." -DICK BORABACK.
